

Lorenzo Filomeni was born in Turin in 1978. When he was twelve, his family moved to Milan, where Lorenzo finished school and went on to graduate in law. Lofilo, the pseudonym adopted by the young artist, was overwhelmed by his passion for making art, and abandoned his promising future as a lawyer to devote himself exclusively to this.

In 2000 he displayed a series of collages at the ASA in Milan. Two years later he took part in the collective show organised at Arte Cultura in the same city. In 2004 the Bianca Maria Rizzi Gallery in Via Molino delle Armi, in Milan, exhibited several of Lofilo's works. In June of the same year, at the Botta swimming pool, the artist took part in the cultural event with Gregorio Mancino: the association between the two artists continued with the creation of a mural for the De Marchi clinic in Milan. An intensive commitment to charitable activity saw Lofilo working alongside Mancino once again in the decoration of an entire room used for visiting time in the prison of Bassone in Como.

In 2005 he participated in Nottart, an impromptu event organised in a private villa on the Versilia coast. In 2006 in Pietrasanta and Forte dei Marmi he showed several works in collaboration with Raffaella Lorenzo, calling the event 'Lorenzo e Lorenzo'.

In 2007 Lofilo's rust paintings were exhibited for the first time at the Alfonso Giannone Gallery in a collective show. In 2008 his solo exhibition entitled 'Rust' was held at Narciso in Marina di Pietrasanta. His work is also permanently exhibited in the Galleria Tempio Arte, Pietrasanta Collection.
